THE TRUTH ABOUT DAYLILIES AND IMPORTANT CULTURAL DIRECTIONS

If you are a flower grower and want an abundance of blooms, if you want a perennial that is very hardy, and needs very little care, choose the Daylily. Daylilies do not require spraying for insects or diseases. They don't require digging or storing for winter. Winter protection is not necessary.

It is important that Daylilies be planted as early as possible in the season so that they can become established before winter. In some sections of the country, especially where heaving and thawing is a problem, many shallow rooted plants are heaved out of the earth and the crowns frozen and killed. This is because they do not have deep enough roots to anchor them in. The Daylily if planted too late may not be able to grow enough roots to anchor them, and in this even they might also heave. If Daylilies are planted within 2 months of your frost date it is advisable as an extra precaution to mulch with some hay, excelsior, or other loose material. After the first winter this will not be necessary, as the Daylilies will, by the second winter be well rooted and anchored in. We lose very few late divided plants here and yet we don't mulch, but mulching is good insurance the first winter.

Plant the crowns of the Daylilies, 1 inch below the surface, the crown is where the root joins the foliage.

Plant Daylilies where drainage is good, and any good garden soil is ok. Daylilies will grow in sandy or clay soil but is happier in a loamy type. Bonemeal is a good fertilizer.

Daylilies like lots of moisture when they are blooming, and will bloom better and make nicer clumps if given water when it is dry. As you know plants are composed mainly of water, but Daylilies are about as drought resistant as the cactus if water is not supplied, and in most all cases bloom and grow well without any additional watering.

Do not judge a bloom or the number of blooms or scapes on a one year plant, even on a few 2 year clumps judgement should not be made as to the quality of the bloom or the abundance of bloom. The blooming habits, as to quantity vary with each variety, but all make a grand display from 2 to 3 years. Do not divide daylilies after 2, 3 or 4 years if they are blooming good, as they are usually at their best from 2 to 10 years in the same location. Dividing can be made when the plant becomes too crowded in its location and this will be evident by the scarcity of blooms and the tendency of the bloom to become smaller. Divide by washing the earth from the roots with a hose and cutting apart with a kitchen knife into 2 or 3 fan divisions. Spring or right after they bloom is a good time to divide. In most cases a light shifting shade as one finds in an open woodland is an ideal place to plant Daylilies, but they will bloom in half shade, but not quite so abundant, and bloom heaviest in full sun. A few varieties if placed in full sun will burn or wilt a little, especially the first two years, while some of the yellows will have a tendency to scorch if the sun is especially hot. So it would be wise to give some shade to your Daylilies until you will be able to judge their reaction to different locations. Placement will have to be determined by the grower.

Spacing Daylilies 3 feet will take care of future growth of plants, and in the first or second year other perennials or annuals may be used between these plants to fill the gap.

Descriptions are as close as we can make under the circumstances, as weather, soil, and location, (sun or shade) has a direct bearing as their specific color in your garden. On cloudy days, reds are sometimes darker. Colors are truer on older clumps.

Height indicated is a general average, as some scapes may be shorter, while others will be taller than indicated. You will also experience a truer height on a more established plant, (2 or more years old).

Season of bloom will vary 2 or more weeks at certain locations, due to the difference in climate.

As to reblooming habits, here at Kansas City we have an average of 6 months of frost free weather, with about 4½ months of 75 degrees or more temperature during the day. Daylilies love hot weather and will not open up well if the days are too cool and especially if it is cloudy. We have possibly 10 varieties that rebloom well here, while possibly over a hundred varieties try to rebloom but perform poorly because of the cool days in the fall. So if you have a 7 to 10 month frost free climate with temperatures above 75 degrees you can expect reblooms on some varieties. The farther south you live from Kansas City, the more varieties you will have to rebloom for you. In the north very few varieties will rebloom satisfactorily due to the cool days and short season. Those of you in the north should rely on the late and late midseason varieties, also use more of the spring bloomers.

Many of our varieties are included in the beautiful sets of Kodachrome slides available for rent from; Phillip Corliss, Somerton, Arizona. Write to him for details. You may also obtain the new book recently released by Dr. Corliss, entitled, Hemerocallis; The perennial Supreme, it is chock full of information about Daylilies.

Dear Friends:

We sincerely appreciated the fine and friendly letters we received from many of you, and wish to thank all of you at this time. During the past season we were so busy with the many activities connected with the Daylily business that we could not find time to answer, but we did read all of your letters and it made us very happy to know that our plants were the source of so much pleasure to so many of you. Below are excerpts from a few of the letters we have on file.

Your shipment arrived in perfect condition this morning. I also received your card stating that they had been shipped on Sept. 29, so there was absolutely no delay in transit. They are certainly fine plants, and am sure that they will perform beautifully. Thank you very much for the fine "Michael Robinson." I was surely surprised and pleased, as I feel that the other Daylilies I received were worth far more than I paid for them. TEXAS

Am happy to advise you the Daylilies arrived Sunday PM in perfect condition as though they had just been lifted from your own garden minus the trip. We were so pleased, in spite of its being Sunday, we planted them immediately and of today, they do not seem to be aware of their changed location. We are pleased with your interest with your splendid plants, and for the extra plants and someday will send another order. (Another larger order was received soon after this) FLORIDA

Plants arrived in excellent condition. Foliage was green, not wilted, and moisture was retained. They were planted immediately and do not appear to have been out of the ground at all. Many thanks for the extra plants. OHIO

The plants came in fine shape and were the most generous ones I have ever seen. If you have any more of those kind of plants of different varieties at such a price please send me a card. OKLA.

The shipment of plants I ordered from you arrived yesterday in the peak of condition. It was a great pleasure for me to receive them in such a well prepared manner, but not nearly so great as the pleasure when I saw what good well wrapped and strong splendidly developed plants that you sent. MISSISSIPPI

I have been wanting to thank you for the lovely order of Daylilies you sent me a few weeks ago. The roots and plants are so healthy looking that it is a pleasure to plant them. ILLINOIS

SPRING NOTICE

About 75% of our stock at the present time is of high quality 2 division plants. We can ship your order immediately if you mind an occasional smaller plant. Otherwise we can ship your order at the times indicated with all large plants. Please indicate your preference.
